

A&P Group is proud of its tradition of offering top class training to apprentices, many of whom go on to have long and successful careers within the company.

One of our current apprentices, based at our Tyne facility, is Josh Bootes who started his training as an apprentice welder in 2017. He is already carving out a successful career having come runner up in The Welding Institute's Welding Student of the Year Awards 2019/2020 and scooping an A&P North East Apprentice of the Month Award.

Josh said: "I chose to follow a career with A&P because I believe they have the potential to make me go far in the future as they dedicate all their time and hard work into each individual apprentice and have our interests at heart.

"A&P has brought out the best person in me and has made me realise that there is a lot more to the shipbuilding industry. I'd recommend anybody to join the A&P team if they are looking to progress throughout their career and make a future for themselves.

"The company brings the best out in everybody. I'm so lucky to be a part of an apprentice scheme which is bringing more talent to the industry.
